++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:

Many areas mostly dry but often rather cloudy.

Today:

Low cloud and patchy light rain across parts of England and east Wales, keeping it chilly. Some southeastern areas turning much brighter. Northern Britain seeing coastal low cloud and fog, but some inland areas fine and turning out fairly warm.

Tonight:

Clear spells for a while across parts of southeast England, leading to patchy frost. Clearer and chilly, too, in parts of Scotland. Elsewhere mostly cloudy, a little drizzle for some.

Saturday:

Sunny spells for parts of eastern Scotland and northeast England, where it should feel rather warm by afternoon. Elsewhere a lot of cloud generally, perhaps a little drizzle for some.

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:

Often quite cloudy, but most places remaining dry each day. Chance of sunny spells most likely in the east. Light winds. Temperatures around average, feeling warm under any cloud breaks.
